I wish I could tell you one more time how much I love you. You were very very special to me. The twinkle in your eyes, your mischievous smile, and your caring heart made you so easy to love. You will live in a special place in my heart forever. Your after school phone calls, the "games" we made up sitting at your mom's kitchen table, your laughter and quick wit will be my fondest memories of the time I spent with you. I was so proud of you .My heart is broken and my tears freely fall for I miss you so much. While you were taken from us far too early, I would rather have known you for a mere 19 years than to have never known you at all.

“ I am devastated. Nick was in my math class as a senior at Salem last year and we developed a great relationship - lots of laughs and a mutual respect. We both knew how smart he was and he loved messing with me by rarely doing his homework or studying, yet always grasping the material and being capable of crushing my tests when he felt like it. But his true passion was in his culinary class and he delighted in telling me what they had cooked on any given day and sneaking me little samples. Nick didn't like conforming to everyone's rules and expectations, but he was a gentle, kind, and caring person who all-too-often wanted to keep that hidden. But I knew, and he knew I knew, and that was the basis for our friendship. We have lost someone who was destined to be a true artist in the kitchen. Nick's passing makes me realize how blessed I am to call my student "my kids" and how glad I am that I constantly tell them how much I love them. I love ya Nick, and I'm so sad that you're not going to come back to share your accomplishments with me. Cook up a storm wherever you go buddy!!
